2005 North Carolina GIS LIVE!

Tuesday, November 15, 2005 at www.GISLiveNC.net

Web cast: 9 am to 1 pm

Join educators and students, government and the general public in celebrating GIS Day! GISLiveNC, on Tuesday, November 15, is an early appetizer to whet the appetite for festivities planned around the state for GIS Day on Wednesday! GIS Day seeks to educate millions of children and adults about how geography makes a difference in our lives, and to demonstrate GIS technology at schools and organizations around the world.

See GIS in action and meet teachers and students across our state as they discover a world of solutions through GIS and GPS. The web site has full details on how to participate, and students are encouraged to take part in the great NCOneMap aerial photo hunt!!

“Open Places – Wild Spaces” is the theme featuring www.nconemap.com and everyone is welcome to participate by “tuning in” to the streaming video web cast. Why not project the web cast onto a screen or wall in your office so everyone can see the excitement?

It only takes an Internet connection and RealPlayer (free) to participate.

You are encouraged to participate in GISLiveNC, or another activity that promotes GIS in your community. We are proud that North Carolina continues to be an important participant in the outreach on GIS Day. For more ideas and lots of great resources, visit: www.gisday.com
